

ABSTRACT

Data may be transferred on a packet radio network by creating a connection between two network entities. The data flow may contain active and passive periods. A connection may be maintained during a passive period for a predetermined amount of time or until further data becomes available for transfer.